Pilot Awards to Understand and/or Reduce Health Disparities
Request for Applications

The Pilot Awards to Understand and/or Reduce Health Disparities aim to develop investigators with a high capacity to engage in partnerships with communities to conduct high-quality health disparities research. Investigations of interest include the development, pilot testing, and/or dissemination of community-based studies to understand and/or eliminate health disparities.

Awardees will receive project assistance from the Investigator Development Core of the Center for Reducing Health Disparities and its Community-Based Research Network (CBRN). Awardees will be expected to make presentations at our health disparities seminars and CBRN meetings and will be invited to interact with visiting speakers, contribute to a health disparities course, and participate in community dissemination forums.

Requests may be made for up to $50,000 in total costs paid over 1 year. The budget may not include salary support for the early stage investigator.

Final decisions on all awards will be made by the National Institutes of Health.

All applications should be submitted via WebGrants (http://webgrants.case.edu/) and must be received by 11:59PM EST, December 15, 2017.

The earliest project start date is February 1, 2018.

Additional information regarding the Center for Reducing Disparities can be found online (http://reducedisparity.org/).